

Superconducting Accelerator Cavity

In collaboration with industry and universities, DOE national laboratories are developing the technology for a new generation of accelerators. Superconducting radio-frequency cavities can accelerate particles quickly and efficiently, providing intense and powerful beams for many applications.

